THE LONG ARM OF THE NATION

The strength of every nation is measured by its sea power. In war the navy is the deciding factor. In peace it is the most powerful insurance against future wars. Governor Trinkle's Big Task

LESSON I IN VIRGINIA GOVERNMENT & CITIZENSHIP

By Jno. Garland Pollard.

Governor E. Lee Trinkle

The College of William and Mary is offering to our readers free tuition in its correspondence course in Virginia Government and Citizenship. Men and women of all ages may be enrolled by sending their names to Box 266, Williamsburg, Va.

The thirty short lessons, of which this is the first, must be compressed in the compass of one column each. Hence the subject can be here treated in the most superficial way and must be supplemented by correspondence, and by a text book to be published before the course is brought to a close. That part of the course appearing in these columns from week to week will not deal so much with the structure of the government as with present problems and the current accomplishments of the several departments.

We shall first study the several departments of the State Government and seek to ascertain what they are doing for the people in advancing the interests of education, good roads, health, pure food, charities, agriculture, labor and commerce. This will bring clearly to our minds how vitally our government affects us in our every day lives and how rapidly has been the growth of the scope of the state's activities. A generation ago our government touched our daily lives but lightly and remotely, but now it has grown into a gigantic business enterprise, gathering for its sustenance a large part of the people's earnings, and seeking to give in return service which can be performed by the State.

Spending Twenty-Five Millions.

Our expenditures will soon reach twenty-five millions per annum, exclusive of the many millions spent by the cities, towns and counties. During the administrations of Governors still living, we spent annually less than three millions, a sum which today would fall several millions short of paying the state's bill for public education alone. The number of public officers, and employees have necessarily grown by leaps and bounds, as the state has entered new fields.

Governor Heads Huge Organization.

At the head of this huge organization, expending millions and employing thousands, stands the Governor. While his power of control over policies and subordinates is not great, compared with the power of heads of big business corporations, yet his influence for economy and efficiency is very potent, and the office calls as never before for executive ability of the highest order, coupled with a talent for and experience in the science of government.

The present Governor, E. Lee Trinkle, was inaugurated February 1st. He came into office, enjoying in an unusual degree, the confidence and admiration of the people. His record as a State Senator had shown him to be an able and progressive leader of men, and his short service as Governor has convinced the whole people that all the strength of his unusually robust mind and body will be devoted with great earnestness to the promotion of the public welfare.

First Test Of Governor's Strength.

The first test of Governor Trinkle's powers of leadership comes with his efforts to get the co-operation of our lawmakers in inaugurating a broad and comprehensive plan for financing the improvement of our highways. If the present General Assembly continues against the Governor's good road policy, we may find him, before the next election, appealing to the people to send to the General Assembly men who will support his policies.

Will The Fight Be Carried To The People?

If the Governor should feel forced to take up such a fight, it would carry to the wholesome effect, for it would carry to the people for decision a question of state policy for the first time since Re-adjuster days, save only when prohibition claimed our attention. Our one party system in Virginia has not served to stimulate on the part of the citizens a study of public questions. Our political campaigns have been too largely personal scrambles for office, with no outstanding state issues. Our people have not been accustomed to have issues discussed before them and therefore have not had the necessary incentive to think for themselves in public affairs.

Who knows but what Governor Trinkle's administration will not be marked by an experience unusual in Virginia, but familiar in some of the states, namely, a Governor appealing to the people to give him a General Assembly which will support his policies.

The duties and powers of the Governor will be discussed in detail in the forthcoming Virginia Government Year Book, and through correspondence with the enrolled students in the correspondence course.

"THE AMERICAN RED CROSS DESERVES A HEARTY RESPONSE," SAYS PRESIDENT IN ANNUAL MESSAGE.

The Roll Call Is A Fitting Season To Take Counsel With Our Inner Selves And To Reaffirm Allegiance To The Great Relief Organization.

Washington, Nov. 7.—The following message from President Wilson, who is also President of the American Red Cross, to the American people, was issued from the White House today:

"The American Red Cross deserves a hearty response to its fourth invitation to annual membership, which will be issued during the fortnight beginning November the Eleventh, Armistice Day.

"Under the stimulus of war and through the co-operation of our people, this organization grew into immense size, enlarged its range of activity, served not only our fighting forces, but also civilians involved in the hardships of war in our own nation and in the nations associated with us in a great common enterprise, and gave to the world an example of effective mercy through co-ordinated effort.

"Since the cessation of hostilities the organization has faced a dual duty: First, to fulfill obligations created by the war, and secondly, to adapt its experience and machinery to the needs of peace.

"It is, today, still assisting government agencies in the care and cheer of our disabled soldiers and sailors, in replacing those able to work in civilian occupations, and in counseling and aiding the families of former combatants; and it is still assisting, with diminished resources, the process of rehabilitation in some of the more prostrated countries of our former associates.

"While continuing these manifest obligations, the Red Cross has been accommodating methods and applying lessons learned in war to the normal needs of our own people in times of peace, especially in regions where provisions for public health and welfare were imperfectly developed. It has placed public health nurses in many localities, and has endeavored to enlist greater numbers of young women in the nursing profession in order that the supply might more nearly equal the steadily increasing demand for community nurses. It has devised a scheme of "public health centers" for the relief of maladies and for instruction in hygiene, dietetics, and general principles of disease-prevention. With its nurses and nurses' aids it has rendered incalculable service in the serious epidemics of influenza. It has carried instruction in hygiene and first aid into schools, the women's clubs, and the homes of our country. It has taught young and untaught mothers how to care intelligently for their babies, and has done much in many ways to promote child welfare, upon which the welfare of the nation ultimately rests. It has made it a fundamental principle to avoid futile duplications, to co-operate with public agencies when its co-operation was sought, and to supply deficiencies where such agencies had not yet been established.

"It has continued its educational work among the school children through its Junior Red Cross branch, and it has, as one result of its war experience, put preparation for disaster-relief on a scientific foundation, so that it is now equipped to meet disaster emergencies promptly in almost every part of our country.

"By systematic plans and practical performances, it has given a clear answer to the question why the Red Cross should be continued and carried over from war activity into peace-time activity. The answer is in the record.

"Additional to these obvious aspects of the matter, there is another reason why I, as President of the United States and President of the American Red Cross, urge my fellow-countrymen to join the Red Cross in impressive numbers: Reaction follows emotion, and after great effort are continuous not intermittent, not contingent merely upon the excitement of war. If there is in some of us an inward cooling of the fine fervor which animated us in the crisis of the nation's stress and peril, a contraction of the spirit which ennobled us as individuals and as a nation, now, during the "Red Cross Roll Call," is a fitting season to take counsel with our inner selves, to rekindle the old flame, to reaffirm allegiance to practical patriotism and practical humanitarianism, and to symbolize the regeneration of our better thoughts and handsomer selves by re-enlistment in a great army mobilized for the common good.

(Signed) "WOODROW WILSON."

A Wish

"I HAVE TAKEN Cardui for run-down, worn-out condition, nervousness and sleeplessness, and I was weak too," says Mrs. Silvie Estes, of Jennings, Okla. "Cardui did me just lots of good—so much that I gave it to my daughter. She complained of a soreness in her sides and back. She took three bottles of Cardui and her condition was much better.

"We have lived here, near Jennings, for 26 years, and now we have our own home in town. I have had to work pretty hard, as this country wasn't built up, and it made it hard on us.

"I WISH I could tell weak women of Cardui—the medicine that helped give me the strength to go on and do my work." This card fulfils her wish.
